Full Service at Compendium – also in IT-Leasing

Munich, 4th December 2009

Hardware, Software and IT projects – is it better to buy or to lease? This is one of the key questions companies are facing when wishing to replace or upgrade their IT or communication technology.

Especially the present economic crises and the restrictive grant of bank loans have led to a higher demand on alternatives to banks. Even if the ITK sector expects a decrease in growth for 2009/2010, the increasing pace of technical innovation and the shortening of product life cycles make new investments necessary.

“Leasing is an attractive financing solution which allows companies to invest in up-to-date technology and keep in forefront of the market. Compendium’s leasing concepts are also designed to generate liquidity beyond a company’s bank credit line”, Peter Köhler, Member of the Board Sales and Marketing of Compendium, commented.

Compendium has developed a free choice of web-based service moduels for Order-, Portfolio- and Rollbackmanagement which supports companies through controlling processes and the management of information relating to their IT assets. This way the whole IT life cycle can be adjusted to the financing solution and allows companies to reduce their total costs of ownership (TCO) significantly.

“Companies benefit from having access to the very latest technology combined with greater financial independence”, said Peter Köhler.
